MARSHALLTOWN – The most gutsy performance at the boys state swimming championships Saturday was turned in by Cedar Rapids Jefferson sophomore Paul Hummel.

He came close to matching his all-time personal best times in both of his races despite undergoing an emergency appendectomy on Thursday.

"I told him it was his choice if he wanted to swim or not," said J-Hawk Coach Ryan York.

Hummel, a 6-foot-3 breaststroke specialist who also normally swims on the freestyle relays, said that once he got in the water, he felt fine.

"Oh, it hurt just a little bit," he said matter-of-factly. "Not that bad. I felt pretty good, actually."

He started getting excruciating stomach pains on Wednesday afternoon just before practice. York said he had a friend in college who suffered an attack of appendicitis with similar symtoms.

He contacted Hummel's parents, Michelle and Kurt, and Paul was taken to the hospital emergency room. Ironically, York said, his swimmer had to have liquids pumped into him on order for a CT scan to produce an image of his abdomen.

"His muscles have too much lean and not enough fat," the coach said.

Hummel stayed overnight at the hospital, underwent surgery at noon Thursday and spent the day at home on Friday.
